Not Your Average Video Hosting Site

Listen American Accent

When something gets yanked from YouTube, where does it end up? Porn sites, apparently!

Not Your Average Video Hosting Site

Pornhub, as the name suggests, is primarily a site for pornographic videos. Launched back in 2007, it's a lot like a XXX-rated YouTube, hosting all kinds of content, both professional and amateur, with social features like sharing and commenting built in. At first glance, it's probably not the obvious place to stick a video of computer game-related footage -- but that's exactly what happened.

The Fallout 4 video was uploaded to the site under the, er euphemistic title "HIDDEN CAMERA SHOWS AUDIENCE TEASED BY BIG BUTT MAN IN TIGHTS LIVE." There might've been some disappointed punters, then, but Fallout fans seemed to have managed to find it okay, and the wobbly, poorly framed video racked up some 200,000 views over two days before Pornhub, too, got round to taking it down.

Considering the number of headlines, you'd think no-one had ever uploaded games-related video to a porn site before, but it isn't as unusual as it first appeared. On gaming forums, porn sites are regularly recommended as hosts for gameplay videos that content creators may not want out there. YouTube has strong relationships with gaming companies, and is quick on the draw when it comes to getting rid of material such as the Fallout footage. Pornhub et al don't tend to have those links -- plus, games companies keep a keen eye on YouTube, while they tend not to be so vigilant around porn sites.

Legalese

In a recent Reddit Ask Me Anything session, Pornhub staff admitted that, while 99% of the material uploaded to their site is pornographic, there are people who use the platform to post gaming and sports videos instead. That's because, while it was designed for sharing the kind of sexually explicit content that most other social media sites ban outright, Pornhub is far from being the wild west you may imagine. It's got its own set of rules, and its terms and conditions are long and detailed: as well as forbidding abusive, defamatory, and hateful content, Pornhub makes users agree not to submit material that's copyrighted, or otherwise protected by law (you can read the whole policy here, if you're so inclined: www.pornhub.com/information#terms).

Obviously stating something in the T&Cs doesn't automatically mean that all users faithfully follow the rules, so Pornhub has a flag facility whereby any user can report an inappropriate video to moderators. There's also a Support section where users can get in touch to report videos they want taken down -- often, used by victims of revenge porn -- and Pornhub's team say they act immediately to remove videos when they get those kinds of reports. So, it's not that Pornhub doesn't care that copyright infringing content was being hosted on the site, it's that no-one expected it to be there; once it knew, it was removed.

In the end, then, this really isn't a story about porn at all (though that might be why it got so much attention). It's about how, no matter how hard companies might try to stop them, people will find ways to access and share whatever content they want. Even if it's badly filmed, even if it's a trailer for a game that'll be out in a couple of months anyway. If enough people want something, they'll find a way to get it, which leaves content creators playing an increasingly frantic game of online Whack A Mole. Take a video down on YouTube, and someone else will upload it. Take that one down, and the same video will show up on Vimeo. Take that down, and it emerges on VideoJug. Take that down, and it turns up on a porn site. And so on, and so on.

What Are They Watching?

All adolescents in this sample reported watching pornography for free and online. Two had watched pornographic videos and/or cable television, but none described viewing pornographic books or magazines. Specific Web sites that were mentioned by numerous participants included YouPorn, RedTube, and Pornhub. Participants reported watching a number of different sub-genres of pornography, and most often reported that they watched pornography featuring heterosexual intercourse or women having sex with women, but they also reported having watched pornography that featured incest, rape, and bestiality. Several mentioned that they had seen pornography featuring bondage, bukkake (i.e., multiple men ejaculating onto one woman's face), group sex, choking, and public humiliation—and while a few females expressed distaste and surprise, the general reaction to these more extreme forms of pornography was indifference or acceptance. Five participants—two males and three females—mentioned that they or their partners always preferred to watch pornography that featured people of their same race or ethnicity (e.g., Black, Hispanic). Males generally provided less detail about the pornography they had viewed. The following exchange (with an 18-year-old male) was typical:

Interviewer: What Web sites do you go to?

Participant: I don't have any specific [one]. Just whatever I Google.

(e.g., bondage/discipline/sadomasochism [BDSM]). Regardless of whether the pornography actors had consented, the images of violence were discomfiting to her. She described the video clip this way:

[I saw] men slap girls in their mouth, like in their faces, or like, open up their mouths when they're doing back shots ... like slapping them on their boobs. Like, slapping, like that would hurt me. Yeah, they just do crazy things.

Where Do They Find Pornography and How Are They Gaining Access?

Youth in this sample reported watching pornography online at home and at school on desktop computers and smartphones. They reported that they were able to access free pornography on the Internet easily even when they were younger than 18 years old. Surprisingly, several ( $n = 3$ ) reported that visiting nonpornographic Web sites that featured particular celebrities led them to pornography sites in which that celebrity was featured. For example, a 17-year-old female reported:

[I am] only interested [in porn] when I know [the] people, like the celebrities. Like, there is so much celebrities out there that you think they're so good, and in reality, you type in their name and they have a porn site.

Similarly, an 18-year-old female described a time that she had intended to listen to the music of a recording early adolescent:

Well, lately they don't really say nothin', but when I was like twelve—maybe eleven or twelve, they used to be on me for that. They didn't want me to watch it. One of the times they caught me... my father was like, "... On, if I catch you again lookin' at this stuff, I'm gonna take your iPod away."

An 18-year-old female provided a clear example of the difficult position that parents may find themselves in. According to her, her mother did not want to discuss pornography with her prepubescent son but at the same time felt compelled to discourage him from using it. She said:

[My mother], she tries to not talk to [my younger brother] about it but give him ways to know what he is doing, he shouldn't be doing at his age. Cause he's only eleven years old.

Discussion

To our knowledge, this is the first study to investigate pornography viewing experiences and habits of a sample of low-income, urban-residing Black and Hispanic youth. Several themes were generated, including (a) that youth had seen a wide range of subgenres of pornography; (b) that youth had easy, free access to online pornography both at home and in school; (c) that youth

Perhaps unsurprisingly, youth in this sample reported having easy access to Internet pornography at home and on their personal electronic devices (e.g., smartphones). We did not anticipate that the experience of viewing pornography on school property, during class, and with peers would be so commonly reported. It could be that in-school pornography viewing occurs more often than expected in resource-challenged schools because there are fewer faculty available to monitor personal electronic device use or update technology that blocks youth's access to illicit Web sites. Of concern is that multiple youth in this sample reported that classmates started "smacking ass" and grabbing females' breasts immediately after watching pornography in the classroom and, in one instance, getting into a fistfight. While there is no question that schools are likely doing all that they can to block student access to pornography, it may be useful for educators to know that pornography may be contributing to a sexualized school climate that facilitates harassment. At the very least, the results of this study clearly demonstrate that some youth are able to access pornography in school despite the U.S. Children's Internet Protection Act (CIPA), which requires that schools receiving Universal Service Administrative Company (USAC) funding have technology protections in place to prevent such access.

In addition, our findings highlighted that some youth use pornography as an instructional resource: youth sought out pornography to learn how to have sex; others

Pornhub's Top Search Terms in US Cities

MARCH 14, 2014

Tweet

Pornhub Insights previously told us what users from each state search for on Pornhub, and how long they last on the site. This time our statisticians got together with the folks at Digg to find out what the Top 5 search terms are in major cities across the United States. In addition we analyzed which pornstars are the most popular. Perennial MILF favorite "Lisa Ann" still tops the list in most cities, but new babes like reality star "Farrah Abraham" and Duke University student "Belle Knox" managed to take the top spot in some places.

The most popular search term so far this year in the US has been "massage", which makes the top 5 in 22 of the 24 cities we looked at and the number 1 spot in 11 cities. Other top searches across the US of A are "lesbian", Pornhub Insights is research and analysis directly from the Pornhub team. We've compiled data from billions of hits, all to explore the intricacies of online porn viewership. Pornhub.com is the world's biggest porn site. Follow Insights for stats, events, and Pornhub related announcements.
