

EBSCO Database Hopping from Elementary/Primary School Databases to Others

It is incredibly easy to “hop” between databases in EBSCO. The “Search Other Databases” option was available in every database researchers examined - including in primary school (Elementary and Middle School).

Screenshot below is from EBSCO Explora Elementary School databases.

If a term is entered in the search yielding “no results were found”, one simply clicks “Search Other Databases” to access several other EBSCO databases without having to enter a password.

Example:

North Carolina

NCWiseOwl > Elementary > Explora enter K12 password (same for all primary and secondary schools students)

Search: pornhub > no results

The screenshot shows the EBSCO Explora search interface. At the top, there are navigation links: "New Search", "Curriculum Standards", "Search Other Databases", and "For Educators". On the right, there are links for "Sign In", "Folder", "Language", and "Help". The search bar contains the text "pornhub" and a "Search" button. Below the search bar, it says "No results were found." To the right of the search bar, it says "NORTH CAROLINA DEPT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION - NCWISEOWL". Below the search bar is a carousel slide about Milk Snakes. The slide has a title "Milk Snake" and a text box that says "There is a popular myth that says milk snakes are called milk snakes because they suck milk directly from the udders of cows. This story is not true. Learn More". Below the carousel slide is a grid of subject categories, each with a representative image and a title: "Animals" (Mammals, Reptiles, Insects, Birds, a...), "Arts and Music" (Art, Music, and More), "Biographies" (Historical and Current Figures), "Geography" (Countries, States, Cities, and More), "Language Arts", "Math", "Science and Health", and "Social Studies".

- 3. Will Bitcoin Replace PayPal On Pornhub? Plus, Fidelity Digital Assets Gets Regulatory Approval.

First article, "Wanna See Banned Footage? Try Pornhub" has a live link to Pornub.

However, some enterprising soul at that top secret event sneakily filmed the showcase, and stuck the footage up online. YouTube, which is pretty quick to clamp down on illicit releases like that nowadays, removed the videos almost as fast as they were posted, but fans still clamoured to see what Fallout goodness they were in for. Another video hosting site was needed -- one that wouldn't be so quick to delete the footage.

Enter Pornhub.

Not Your Average Video Hosting Site

Pornhub, as the name suggests, is primarily a site for pornographic videos. Launched back in 2007, it's a lot like a XXX-rated YouTube, hosting all kinds of content, both professional and amateur, with social features like sharing and commenting built in. At first glance, it's probably not the obvious place to stick a video of computer game-related footage -- but that's exactly what happened.

The Fallout 4 video was uploaded to the site under the, er euphemistic title "HIDDEN CAMERA SHOWS AUDIENCE TEASED BY BIG BUTT MAN IN TIGHTS LIVE." There might've been some disappointed punters, then, but Fallout fans seemed to have managed to find it okay, and the wobbly, poorly framed video racked up some 200,000 views over two days before Pornhub, too, got round to taking it down.

Considering the number of headlines, you'd think no-one had ever uploaded games-related video to a porn site before, but it isn't as unusual as it first appeared. On gaming forums, porn sites are regularly recommended as hosts for gameplay videos that content creators may not want out there. YouTube has strong relationships with gaming companies, and is quick on the draw when it comes to getting rid of material such as the Fallout footage. Pornhub et al don't tend to have those links -- plus, games companies keep a keen eye on YouTube, while they tend not to be so vigilant around porn sites.

Legalese

In a recent Reddit Ask Me Anything session, Pornhub staff admitted that, while 99% of the material uploaded to their site is pornographic, there are people who use the platform to post gaming and sports videos instead. That's because, while it was designed for sharing the kind of sexually explicit content that most other social media sites ban outright, Pornhub is far from being the wild west you may imagine. It's got its own set of rules, and its terms and conditions are long and detailed: as well as forbidding abusive, defamatory, and hateful content, Pornhub makes users agree not to submit material that's copyrighted, or otherwise protected by law (you can read the whole policy here, if you're so inclined: www.pornhub.com/information#terms).

Obviously stating something in the T&Cs doesn't automatically mean that all users faithfully follow the rules, so Pornhub has a flag facility whereby any user can report an inappropriate video to moderators. There's also a Support section where users can get in touch to report videos they want taken down -- often, used by victims of revenge porn -- and Pornhub's team say they act immediately to remove videos when they get those kinds of reports. So, it's not that Pornhub doesn't care that copyright infringing content was being hosted on the site, it's that no-one expected it to be there; once it knew, it was removed.

In the end, then, this really isn't a story about porn at all (though that might be why it got so much attention). It's about how, no matter how hard companies might try to stop them, people will find ways to access and share whatever content they want. Even if it's badly filmed, even if it's a trailer for a game that'll be out in a couple of months anyway. If enough people want something, they'll find a way to get it, which leaves content creators playing an increasingly frantic game of online Whack A Mole. Take a video down on YouTube, and someone else will upload it. Take that one down, and the same video will show up on Vimeo. Take that down, and it emerges on VideoJug. Take that down, and it turns up on a porn site. And so on, and so on.

All This Has Happened Before

Clicked on the link. The screen below showed up for a few seconds and then...

The image shows a screenshot of the Pornhub website's Terms of Service page. At the top, the Pornhub logo is visible on the left, and a search bar with the text "Search 13,411,756 videos..." is in the center. To the right of the search bar are buttons for "Upload" and "Upgrade". Further right are links for "Login" and "Sign Up". Below the search bar is a navigation menu with categories: HOME, PORN VIDEOS, CATEGORIES, LIVE CAMS, PORNSTARS, FUCK NOW, COMMUNITY, and PHOTOS & GIFS. A secondary navigation bar contains links for Advertising, FAQ, Terms of Service (which is highlighted), Privacy Policy, DMCA, DMCA Takedown Form, 2257, Webmasters, Content Partner Program, and Rating. The main heading is "Terms Of Service". Below this, it states "Last Modified: March 8, 2020". The text continues with "Acceptance of the Terms of Service" and explains that by using the website, users agree to the terms. It defines "Content" and states that users do not agree to these terms if they do not want to access the website. It also mentions that users consent to entering terms electronically and that the updated version of the terms supersedes previous ones. There is a section titled "About Our Websites" which states that the websites allow for uploading and sharing of adult-oriented content. It also mentions that users understand and acknowledge that they may be exposed to content from various sources. The page ends with "Communication Preferences" and a statement that users consent to receiving electronic communications.

Researcher wasn't even going to click further (as we know what content is on Pornub). However, researcher accidentally bumped mouse, and it popped up this page.
